Guru Nanak Dev, the founder of Sikhism, was a great saint and reformer. He was born in 1469 in the village of Talwandi, now Nankana Sahib, in the Punjab region of India. His parents were Kalu Mehta, a village accountant, and Mata Tripta, a simple and pious woman.

From a young age, Nanak showed signs of being an extraordinary child. He was curious about spiritual matters, and he spent much time meditating and studying the scriptures. At the age of 16, he married Mata Sulakhni, and they had two sons, Sri Chand and Lakshmi Das.

In 1496, at the age of 28, Nanak had a profound spiritual experience. He was sitting on the bank of the river Bein when he disappeared into the water. Three days later, he emerged from the river and declared, "There is no Hindu, no Muslim." This experience marked the beginning of his mission as a spiritual teacher.

Nanak traveled extensively throughout India, teaching his message of love, compassion, and equality. He established the Sikh faith, which is based on the principles of truth, equality, and justice. He also founded the city of Kartarpur, which became a major center of Sikhism.

Nanak's teachings have had a profound impact on the world. He taught that all people are equal, regardless of their race, religion, or gender. He also taught that the true path to God is through love and service to others.
